Brief Description of Institution

Founded in 1968, the University of Silesia in Katowice (USil) is one of Poland's largest and most dynamically developing public universities, recognised as a vibrant academic institution and a vital interdisciplinary research hub. It is a major player in global research, with outstanding teams and well equipped laboratories such as the SpinLAB Centre. USil offers nearly 100 degree programmes and over 180 majors, educating 18,000 students guided by almost 2,000 academics. The University builds long term international partnerships and, with ten foreign institutions, forms the Transform4Europe Alliance. USil leads a consortium of seven Katowice based universities and organises the Silesian Science Festival - one of Europe's biggest science communication events. It supports the transformation of Katowice and Silesia into a science and education based region and expands its research infrastructure through major investments, including the Silesian Interdisciplinary Centre for Chemistry.
